Customer Reviews

like most of the time-life series of books, this one is well written and illustrated. chapter one is "first encounters" like: john cabot, jacques cartier, martin frobisher, and, john davis. chapter two, "siren song of the north": henry hudson, sir thomas button, and, william baffin. chapter three, "ambitious assaults": the hudson bay company, samual hearne and, james cook. chapter four: "inside the maze": william scoresby, john ross, william edward parry, john franklin, frederick beechey, and james clark ross. chapter five, "martyrs to fame": george back, thomas simpson, sir john franklin's expedition of 1845, robert mcclure, the search for franklin's expedition, john rae, and the book ends with: roald amundsen, the "gjoa" (ship), and some photos of modern "icebreakers". after reading, this book reveals much of the naivete that went hand in hand with polar exploration for a couple hundred years and continued for so long. most astonishing, no one ever seemed to ask themselves how the native people survived in this harsh area of the earth. if they had, perhaps more explorers would have been in triumph and not failure. this book has color and black/white illustrations, drawings and diagrams.
